DO YOU KNOW?

Salvador Dali

Spanish artist and Surrealist icon Salvador Dali is perhaps best known for his painting of melting clocks, The Persistence of Memory. Salvador Dali was born Salvador Felipe Jacinto Dalí y Domenech on May 11, 1904.

Dali was expelled from art school, but only because he wanted to be

The budding artist refused to be examined for the art history final of his degree, saying "none of the professors of the school being competent to judge me, I retire." Dali’s reason for leaving was not, however, ideological, but practical: he wanted to continue being financially supported by his father, but this would stop once he had a degree. Instead, he now had reason to go and study in Paris at his expense.

He found deep meaning (and math) in cauliflowers

Dali filled up a white Rolls Royce Phantom II with 500 kg of cauliflowers and drove it from Spain to Paris in December 1955. He later told an audience of 2,000, his reasoning, "Everything ends up in the cauliflower!" He explained to American journalist Mike Wallace three years later that he was attracted to their "logarithmic curve."

Fall: exciting times

What an exciting time at Creative Arts Secondary School! In the month of November, we will begin many new initiatives.

During the first week, we will roll out our iPads and grace our new auditorium with the opening of The Little Shop of Horrors. You all are invited to experience the wonderful talents of our students from the front stage to the back.

There are two weeks until the end of Quarter One. November 13 marks the end of the quarter. Parents, I encourage you to check in with your child and use Parent Portal to ensure that your child has turned in all of their work. The second week of school students will be taking final exams for the quarter. It is important that students start off the year strong.

On November 10 at 6 p.m., we will host our second Parent Academy Workshop entitled A Family Guide to Problem Solving School Related Issues. If you have not registered, I encourage you to contact our cultural liaison, Josie Ahartz. There will be food, daycare, and parking validation provided.

Quarter two starts on November 16th. Sixth grade students will start a new arts exploration. They will have an opportunity to learn the foundations to a new art focus. It is expected that students give 100% participation in each art form.

Picture retakes are scheduled for November 19th. So, if your child was absent or would like to retake their picture, please send them to school prepared to be photographed. Students have the day off on November 20th allowing time for teachers to participate in a full day of professional development.

During the fourth week of November, we will start our MCA OPLA testing window. This testing window will last for four weeks. The data from this test will help teachers identify areas where there is a need for more attention. Please encourage your student to do their best so we can have accurate data to focus our instruction.

CASS looks forward to celebrating the students that displayed A.R.T.S., the PBIS matrix, during the first quarter. On behalf of the CASS staff, I would like to say thank you to all of the students who displayed positive behavior in everything they have done during quarter one. Keep up the excellent work!

Lastly, I would like to thank the CASS staff for all of the work that you have done thus far this school year. Thank you for being reflective in your practice and going beyond the call to ensure that students learning and personal needs are being met. To Deanna Henry, we wish you the best in your new position. The support you gave as our guidance technician will truly be missed.

Critical Response can help bring clarity to complex experiences at school and at home
by Benjamin Lacina, Program Manager

Ever wonder how you can support the arts learning of your entire family (especially when you’ve just had one of those “huh?” experiences? Try using something that Creative Arts students and teachers are using at school: Critical Response.

Start with senses
If you’re not sure what to interpret from your experience, start with your basic senses. (And refrain from judgement.) What did you see? Your sense of sight is a great place to start. No observation is too simple. Next, try asking, what did you hear? Was it loud or quiet? Fast or slow? You can even use this process with new foods and your sense of taste or touch.

Think back
The next part of the process is to connect this experience to things you’ve experienced in the past. What does it remind you of? These can be simple or complex connections. It could be a family trip, a memory from growing up, or even another arts experience. It could be something similar or different.

Search feelings
This is probably the most distant question from what we’re used to experiencing in school, however it can be the most potentially exciting. How does it make you feel? is the third question in the process. Here is where we connect the experience to the social/emotional aspects of our humanity. This is often where we make the deepest connection to our own individual experience.

Our feelings may or may not be the same as the person next to us. This part of the conversation can also make us experience a bit of vulnerability.

Ask questions
This is the part of our learning that drives the experience forward. What questions does it make you ask? Or even, better, what do you wonder? This piece of curiosity can drive many things into our future, causing us to pursue the answers to the questions we pose. This can be the most powerful aspect of Critical Response, because this part of the process can actually occur far from the initial experience with a piece of art.

Learning something
By processing the first four questions, we can come to a better understanding of the experience we’ve just lived through. This can be used on family vacations, after watching a movie or television shows, or even during the solving of math problems during homework hour at the kitchen table.

Critical Response offers a safe way to deconstruct the experiences of our everyday lives that sometimes confuse us. Ask your children where they have used this process at school. Encourage them to practice this with you and your family. This will reinforce some of the critical thinking and reflection practices that we are implementing at school.

It also has the power to drive creative learning even further than we sometimes expect with our own work!

Critical Response
1. What do you notice? (Describe, without judgment, what you see/hear)
2. What does it remind you of?
3. How does it make you feel?
4. What questions does it make you ask?
5. What do you learn?

Make it a field trip for the whole family!

After School

Every Monday and Wednesday, middle school students have access to Extended Day Learning (EDL) opportunities in reading and math. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, students can stay after school to participate in the Mobile Jazz Project. Visit our website for program dates, more information, or to register!
Creative Arts students recognized for exemplifying “A.R.T.S.” during October

Congratulations to the following students for being nominated by teachers and staff at Creative Arts Secondary School to be Students of the Month for October. Students were nominated based on their ability to model the positive “A.R.T.S.” behaviors and characteristics that we display as a school community.
